The very severe epidemic among horses which is reported from America and Canada is of a kind well known here. It is, in fact, an epidemic influenza. This epizootic is a catarrhal affection resembling, in all its symptoms and its course, the epidemic influenza of poor humanity. It runs a definite course: it is accompanied by severe of poor humanity. It runs a definite of poor humanity. It runs a definite course; it is accompanied by severe national masal catarrh, general fever and debility; in severe cases the lungs and pleure are apt to be affected. It requires the same kind of nursing in animals as trade, the pane kind of nursing in animals as trade, change the property of the pane kind of nursing in animals as trade, change the property of the pane kind of nursing in animals as the pane kind of nursing in animals as the pane kind of nursing in animals as the pane with the pane wit the same kind of nursing in snimals as in men. Rest within doors, a light, nourishing diet, mild febrifuge medicine, if any, and attention to the local troubles of the throat and air-passages. A very small proportion of the cases are fatal, but the epidemic is apt to prove very troublesome in European experience, by its widespread and debilitating character.

These fatal complications are mostly found in horses which have been sick under the circumstances above mentioned, and rarely in horses which have been carefully kept previous to the attack, and well attended during and after the fever. Horses convalescing from this epidemic should have a highly nutritious and easily-digested diet.

This, I fear, will make that an office for life, first, and then hereditary. I was such an enemy to monarchies before I came to Europe, I am ten thousand times more so since I have seen what they are. There is scarcely an evil known in these countries which may not be traced to their king as its source, nor a good which is not derived from the small fibres of republicanism existing among them. I can further say, with safety, that there is not a crowned head in Europe whose talents or merits coal featible him to be elected a vestryman by the people of any
